1. What is expected from members in terms of participation and service in the Assemblies of God?

- A. Minimal involvement in church activities
- B. Active involvement in ministry and supporting the church's mission
- C. Only financial support without active participation
- D. Strict attendance at all church services

Active involvement in ministry and supporting the church's mission is a fundamental expectation for members of the Assemblies of God. This engagement reflects the church's emphasis on the Great Commission, which calls Christians to share the Gospel and serve their communities. Members are encouraged not only to participate in worship services but also to take part in various ministries, outreach programs, and other church activities that contribute to the overall mission of spreading the teachings of Jesus Christ. The Assemblies of God promotes a model of church life where every member is seen as a part of the body of Christ, utilizing their gifts and talents in service to others. This active participation helps foster a sense of community, accountability, and spiritual growth among members, aligning with the church's core values of involvement and mission-driven work. In contrast, other options suggest lesser degrees of commitment that do not align with the expected culture within the Assemblies of God. For instance, minimal involvement undermines the church's collective mission and individual growth opportunities. Solely providing financial support without active participation misses the relational aspect of church life, while strict attendance, though important, does not encompass the broader call for active engagement in ministry and community service.

2. Which of the following is not a core belief in the Assemblies of God?

- A. Divine Healing
- B. Baptism in the Holy Spirit
- C. Predestination
- D. Salvation

In the Assemblies of God, a core belief revolves around specific doctrines that emphasize key tenets of the faith, which include divine healing, baptism in the Holy Spirit, and salvation. These beliefs are central to the Pentecostal heritage of the denomination, signifying the importance of experiencing God's power in personal and communal worship. Divine Healing is recognized as a promise of God to His people, where physical and spiritual healing is considered part of the total salvation experience. Likewise, Baptism in the Holy Spirit is a pivotal doctrine that highlights the empowering experience believed to enable Christians to live holy lives and effectively share their faith, often evidenced by speaking in tongues. Salvation, the foundational belief in accepting Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, is crucial to the Assemblies of God mission, emphasizing personal faith and transformation. In contrast, predestination does not align with the core theological tenets of the Assemblies of God. The denomination traditionally emphasizes free will and the belief that individuals have the choice to accept or reject God's grace. This perspective contrasts with the idea of predestination, which suggests that some individuals are chosen for salvation regardless of their actions or decisions. Hence, predestination is not a core belief in the Assemblies of God, distinguishing it from the other choices.

3. Who can serve as a deacon in Assemblies of God churches?

- A. Anyone willing to volunteer
- B. Only those with a degree in theology
- C. Committed members who meet biblical and church standards
- D. Only ordained ministers

In Assemblies of God churches, deacons are expected to be committed members who adhere to both biblical principles and the specific standards set by the church. This role is grounded in the New Testament, where deacons are identified as individuals who serve and support the ministry, embodying characteristics such as good character, faith, and a willingness to serve others. The Assemblies of God polity emphasizes that deacons should reflect the values and teachings of Scripture, demonstrating their commitment through their actions and lifestyle. Furthermore, being a deacon typically involves fulfilling certain qualifications as outlined in the Bible, such as known integrity and being full of the Holy Spirit, which sets a standard for those who aspire to this role. In contrast, options suggesting that anyone can volunteer or that only those with a theology degree or ordained ministers are eligible do not align with the structured approach that Assemblies of God takes toward leadership roles. While volunteers may play a vital role in ministry, deaconship represents a distinct office within the church that requires a deeper level of commitment and adherence to the established standards.

4. How does the Assemblies of God view the Lord's Supper?

- A. As a mandatory ritual
- B. As a symbolic act commemorating the death of Christ
- C. As an opportunity for community building
- D. As a celebration of church membership

The Assemblies of God emphasizes the Lord's Supper as a symbolic act commemorating the death of Christ. This perspective is rooted in the belief that the bread and cup represent the body and blood of Jesus, serving as a reminder of the sacrifice He made for humanity. The practice of Communion is intended to foster a spiritual reflection on the significance of Christ's atoning work rather than functioning as a literal transformation of the elements. In this context, it is seen as a meaningful act of remembrance and an opportunity for believers to reaffirm their faith. It underscores the importance of Jesus' sacrifice and encourages participants to reflect on their own relationship with Him. This understanding promotes personal devotion and reverence, aligning with the broader theological framework of the Assemblies of God regarding salvation and grace. The other options do not align with the core beliefs of the Assemblies of God regarding the nature of the Lord's Supper, focusing instead on elements that are secondary to its primary purpose of remembrance and commemoration.

5. What aspect of worship is emphasized in the Assemblies of God?

- A. Structured liturgical practices
- B. Pre-planned worship events
- C. Spontaneity and expressiveness
- D. Minimal participation from the congregation

The Assemblies of God places a strong emphasis on spontaneity and expressiveness in worship. This approach is rooted in the belief that worship should be a dynamic and vibrant experience, allowing individuals to freely express their faith and connection with God. The AG encourages congregants to engage wholeheartedly, often incorporating spontaneous elements such as spontaneous prayer, songs, or testimonies that emerge during the service. This style reflects the emphasis on the active work of the Holy Spirit during worship, fostering an environment where worshippers can experience a personal encounter with God's presence. In contrast, structured liturgical practices and pre-planned worship events can lead to a more restrained and predictable worship experience, which is less aligned with the AG's emphasis on a Spirit-led and expressive worship style. Additionally, minimal participation from the congregation would contradict the AG's focus on vibrant engagement and communal involvement in worship, as active participation is considered essential for a fulfilling corporate worship experience. This focus on spontaneity and expressiveness distinguishes the Assemblies of God from other denominations that may have more traditional or rigid worship formats.

6. What governs the eligibility of women in ministry within the Assemblies of God?

- A. State laws
- B. Personal church opinions
- C. Scripture
- D. Local church guidelines

The eligibility of women in ministry within the Assemblies of God is fundamentally governed by Scripture. The Assemblies of God emphasizes the authority of the Bible as the primary source for doctrine and practice, which includes matters related to church leadership and ministry roles. Key passages in the New Testament, such as Galatians 3:28 and the examples of women in ministry roles in the early church, support the idea that women can serve in various capacities, including pastoral and leadership positions. Scripture serves as a guiding framework for the denomination's policies and decisions regarding ministry eligibility, reflecting a commitment to biblical teachings over cultural or local standards. This scriptural foundation helps maintain consistency across the denomination, ensuring that all leaders and congregations adhere to the same biblical principles when it comes to the involvement of women in ministry. In contrast, state laws, personal church opinions, and local church guidelines may influence how these principles are implemented, but they do not determine overall eligibility. The Assemblies of God holds that any policies must align with the teachings of Scripture, which is why it is the definitive source regarding the matter.

7. Who typically provides leadership training within the Assemblies of God?

- A. District superintendents
- B. Senior church councils
- C. Local congregations only
- D. National leadership teams

Leadership training within the Assemblies of God is typically provided by district superintendents. These individuals play a crucial role in overseeing the churches within their district, facilitating growth, and fostering effective ministry practices. District superintendents are experienced leaders who not only understand the theological and practical aspects of ministry but also are well-versed in the unique challenges that local churches may face. They often organize training events, workshops, and seminars to equip leaders with the skills necessary for effective church governance and outreach. While senior church councils and national leadership teams also contribute to leadership development, they do so in different contexts. Local congregations may provide some training but are generally focused on their immediate community needs rather than district-wide or national initiatives. Therefore, the primary responsibility for leadership training at the district level falls on the district superintendents, making this the correct answer.

8. What is the significance of the Statement of Fundamental Truths in Assemblies of God?

- A. It is a document that discourages external influences
- B. It outlines the essential beliefs of the fellowship
- C. It serves as a guide for church architecture
- D. It is primarily a financial statement for transparency

The Statement of Fundamental Truths is significant because it outlines the essential beliefs of the Assemblies of God fellowship, serving as a foundational doctrinal framework that unites its churches and members. This document clearly articulates the core theological positions that are critical to the identity and practice of the Assemblies of God, such as beliefs in salvation, baptism in the Holy Spirit, the authority of Scripture, and the second coming of Christ. By establishing these fundamental truths, it helps to ensure that congregations are aligned in their faith and practices, fostering a sense of unity and shared purpose among members. This document plays a crucial role in shaping the teachings and practices within the fellowship, guiding everything from preaching to educational materials. The other options do not accurately represent the primary function of the Statement of Fundamental Truths.

9. Which of the following is required for a church to affiliate with the Assemblies of God?

- A. Meet a minimum active voting membership of 50
- B. Accept the tenets of faith of the Assemblies of God
- C. Provide a yearly donation to the Assemblies of God
- D. Conduct annual community service events

To affiliate with the Assemblies of God, a church must accept the tenets of faith of the Assemblies of God. This requirement ensures that the church aligns with the foundational beliefs and doctrinal standards that characterize the Assemblies of God fellowship. These tenets encompass key theological beliefs, including the nature of Scripture, the essentials of salvation, the work of the Holy Spirit, and the significance of the Church. By affirming these tenets, a church demonstrates its commitment to the core values and doctrinal integrity of the Assemblies of God, fostering unity and shared purpose within the movement. The other options, while they may reflect practices that some churches engage in, are not prerequisites for affiliation. For instance, a minimum active voting membership or conducting community service may be part of a church's operational strategy, but they do not directly pertain to the essential theological alignment required for joining the fellowship. Similarly, the expectation to provide a yearly donation is not a foundational requirement for affiliation. Overall, the acceptance of the Assemblies of God tenets of faith serves as the primary basis for establishing a church's relationship with the fellowship, setting the doctrinal framework for its ministry and mission.

10. What is a primary focus of the Assemblies of God in missions?

- A. Building local community centers
- B. Supporting missionaries through funding and prayer
- C. Encouraging self-sustainability of local congregations
- D. Establishing businesses in foreign countries

The primary focus of the Assemblies of God in missions is primarily on supporting missionaries through funding and prayer. This emphasis stems from a biblical mandate to spread the Gospel and reach the nations. The Assemblies of God believes in equipping and sending out missionaries to share the message of Jesus Christ, which requires financial resources and spiritual backing from the church community. Financial support enables missionaries to establish their presence in various parts of the world, allowing them to focus on evangelism, discipleship, and church planting without the burden of financial constraints. Prayer support is equally essential as it underpins the spiritual aspect of missions. The church encourages its members to pray for missionaries, acknowledging that spiritual warfare is a significant component of missionary work. Effective communication of the Gospel often involves overcoming cultural, linguistic, and spiritual barriers, making sustained prayer an invaluable asset in their mission efforts. While building local community centers, encouraging self-sustainability of local congregations, and establishing businesses in foreign countries may play roles in specific mission strategies or initiatives, the core mission of the Assemblies of God tends to prioritize the direct support and sustenance of missionaries to fulfill the Great Commission. Thus, the emphasis on financial and prayer support highlights a central aspect of how the Assemblies of God approaches its
