1. According to 2 Timothy 3, what is one purpose of Scripture?

- A. To promote philosophical debates
- B. To provide entertainment
- C. To equip believers for every good work
- D. To offer cultural critiques

The purpose of Scripture as highlighted in 2 Timothy 3 is indeed to equip believers for every good work. This passage emphasizes the transformative power of Scripture in the life of a believer, indicating that it is not merely a historical document or a source of moral teachings, but a living text that actively prepares and empowers individuals for service in the Kingdom of God. The context of 2 Timothy 3 discusses the importance of Scripture for spiritual growth, teaching, reproof, correction, and training in righteousness. This equips believers to live according to God's will and be effective in their ministry and good deeds. In this light, other options do not align with the primary purpose outlined in the verse. While philosophical debates and cultural critiques can arise from the study of Scripture, they are not the intended outcomes as described in this context. Additionally, while Scripture may provide enjoyable reading and inspiration, its primary function is to guide and prepare believers in their walk with Christ and in their service to others.

2. What is the primary focus of The Christian and Missionary Alliance's mission?

- A. To engage primarily with local communities
- B. To fulfill the Great Commission globally
- C. To create a network of recreational activities
- D. To pursue academic excellence in theology

The primary focus of The Christian and Missionary Alliance's mission is to fulfill the Great Commission globally. This concept is rooted in the directive issued by Jesus in Matthew 28:19-20, where He commissions His followers to make disciples of all nations. The Christian and Missionary Alliance emphasizes this global mission through various ministries, including church planting, evangelism, and cross-cultural missions. Fulfilling the Great Commission involves reaching diverse populations and sharing the message of Jesus Christ beyond local boundaries, often requiring a strategic approach to cultural differences and engagement methods. This focus is foundational to the Alliance's identity and is reflected in its commitment to sending missionaries and supporting international partnerships. The other options, while they may be part of the broader activities or goals a church can engage in, do not encapsulate the central mission of the Christian and Missionary Alliance as explicitly as the call to fulfill the Great Commission. Engaging with local communities, creating networks for recreation, or pursuing academic excellence may contribute to the overall health of the church, but they do not define the core mission that drives the organization's global outreach and evangelistic efforts.

3. Why is the doctrine of the resurrection considered vital to the Christian faith?

- A. It represents a mere tradition of the church
- B. It signifies hope in human teachings alone
- C. It validates Jesus as the Son of God through His bodily resurrection
- D. It marks the end of all religious practices

The doctrine of the resurrection is considered vital to the Christian faith because it directly validates Jesus as the Son of God through His bodily resurrection. This event is the cornerstone of Christian belief, demonstrating God's power over sin and death. It confirms Jesus' divine nature and His teachings, making it a foundational truth that underpins the entire Christian life and the promise of eternal life for believers. In Christianity, the resurrection is not just an isolated event but is integral to the overall message of salvation and the hope Christians have in life after death. The resurrection assures believers that they too will be raised in a similar manner, thus providing a source of hope and encouragement in the faith. This centrality to the resurrection distinguishes Christianity from mere traditions and human philosophies, emphasizing a relational and transformative experience that comes from faith in the risen Christ. Moreover, the resurrection is a pivotal theme in the New Testament writings, with numerous references linking it to the believer's identity and future hope, further underscoring its critical importance in Christian doctrine.

4. How should a pastor approach a doctrinal disagreement with the church leadership?

- A. Argue until a consensus is reached
- B. Remain engaged until directed otherwise
- C. Refrain from addressing the issue
- D. Seek other pastoral opinions

A pastor should approach a doctrinal disagreement with church leadership by remaining engaged until directed otherwise because this reflects a commitment to dialogue and a willingness to seek understanding. Engaging with leadership in a respectful and thoughtful manner can foster healthy discussions that may lead to clarity and unity within the church. This approach emphasizes the importance of relationship-building and the belief that understanding and reconciliation can be achieved through continued communication and collaboration. Remaining engaged signals a readiness to listen and learn from one another, as well as a desire to uphold the unity of the church body. It encourages a spirit of humility and respect, which is essential when navigating complex theological differences. The pastor should be prepared to express their views while also being open to listening to the perspectives of others, creating an environment conducive to resolving the disagreement in a constructive manner. Other options imply approaches that may not foster healthy dialogue. For instance, arguing until consensus is reached might create conflict and division rather than resolution. Refraining from addressing the issue can lead to unresolved tensions that undermine the church's mission and unity. Seeking other pastoral opinions could be valuable, but it ideally should be done in the context of an ongoing conversation with the church leadership rather than as a primary approach to resolving disagreements. Thus, remaining engaged is the most

5. How does the Christian and Missionary Alliance encourage evangelism?

- A. By discouraging public witness of faith
- B. Through personal and corporate efforts along with member training
- C. Only through online campaigns and advertisements
- D. By following government regulations strictly

The Christian and Missionary Alliance emphasizes the importance of evangelism as a fundamental aspect of its mission and identity. The correct answer highlights that the C&MA encourages evangelism through both personal and corporate efforts, as well as through the training of its members. This approach reflects a holistic view of evangelism where individuals are empowered to share their faith both in their personal lives and through corporate church initiatives. Training members is essential because it equips them with the necessary knowledge, skills, and confidence to engage in evangelistic activities effectively. This can include one-on-one interactions, community outreach programs, and church-sponsored missions, all aimed at spreading the Gospel. The combination of personal testimony and collective church efforts enhances the overall impact of evangelism within communities. In contrast, discouraging public witness or relying solely on online campaigns does not align with the active and relational nature of evangelism that the C&MA promotes. Following government regulations is important for ethical practices but does not encapsulate the proactive evangelistic mission of the church. Thus, the chosen response embodies a well-rounded approach to fulfilling the Great Commission, revealing the commitment of the C&MA to reach others with the message of Christ.

6. How does the CandMA respond to social justice issues?

- A. They prioritize missions over social justice concerns
- B. They discourage engagement in social issues
- C. They promote taking action in social justice and advocacy for the marginalized
- D. They focus on doctrinal purity rather than community involvement

The correct response reflects the Christian and Missionary Alliance's commitment to not just spiritual matters, but also to the holistic care of individuals and communities. The C&MA recognizes that social justice is integral to the Christian faith, embodying the teaching of Christ to love one's neighbor and advocate for the marginalized. This approach highlights the importance of taking practical steps to address issues such as poverty, inequality, and injustice, aligning with their mission to demonstrate the love of Christ not only through evangelism but through tangible acts of service and advocacy. The C&MA believes that believers are called to live out their faith in ways that impact society positively, engaging in social justice to bring about change and support for those who are vulnerable. This perspective encourages followers of Christ to reflect the character of God, who is deeply concerned for justice and mercy. In contrast, the other choices reflect a more limited or even neglectful approach to social justice within the framework of the Christian mission, which does not align with the C&MA's comprehensive understanding of their role in the world.

7. What is a suggested frequency for the Sabbath to help manage personal and work life?

- A. Every day
- B. Twice a week
- C. Once a week
- D. Once a month

The suggestion to observe the Sabbath once a week aligns with the traditional understanding of a day of rest observed in many Christian practices. The Sabbath is rooted in biblical teachings, notably in the Creation account where God rested on the seventh day, and in the commandment to keep the Sabbath holy. Establishing a weekly rhythm provides a regular opportunity for rest, reflection, and worship, which can significantly contribute to spiritual health and balance in personal and work life. By designating one day for cessation from typical work activities, individuals can recharge spiritually and physically, making this approach effective in preventing burnout and fostering a deeper connection with God and community. Additionally, a weekly Sabbath allows individuals to prioritize family time, personal growth, and service, further enhancing their overall well-being and effectiveness in both personal and professional spheres.

8. Which verse is cited as affirming the belief that God exists in three persons?

- A. Matthew 28
- B. 1 Peter 1
- C. Romans 8
- D. Acts 2

The correct choice highlights Matthew 28, which contains the Great Commission, where Jesus instructs His disciples to baptize in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. This explicit mention of the three persons is significant because it articulates the triune nature of God—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—integral to Christian doctrine. The phrasing "in the name of" implies a unity of purpose and action among the three distinct persons of the Trinity, affirming the belief in one God existing in three persons working together in the work of salvation. The other passages mentioned do not provide a direct reference to the Trinity in this manner. For example, 1 Peter 1 discusses aspects of salvation and sanctification but does not specifically address the triune nature of God. Romans 8 is focused on life in the Spirit and the assurance of salvation, while Acts 2 recounts the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, which, although pivotal in understanding the Holy Spirit's role, does not explicitly affirm the Trinity in the way Matthew 28 does. Thus, Matthew 28 serves as a foundational text for understanding the concept of the Trinity in the Christian faith.

9. What is the Christian and Missionary Alliance's position on prosperity theology?

- A. They fully embrace prosperity theology
- B. They emphasize faith in God's provision rather than a promise of wealth
- C. They teach that wealth is the primary goal of faith
- D. They reject all forms of financial support in ministry

The Christian and Missionary Alliance (C&MA) holds a position that emphasizes faith in God's provision rather than affirming the idea of wealth as a promised outcome of faith. This perspective aligns with the belief that while God provides for our needs, the focus of the Christian life is not on accumulating material wealth but on spiritual growth and reliance on God's sufficiency in all circumstances. The C&MA teaches that God's provision can take various forms and that living a life of faith may lead to various experiences, including challenges. This understanding fosters a reliance on God's guidance and support rather than a transactional view of faith where financial blessing is seen as a reward for spiritual devotion. Such an approach encourages believers to prioritize their relationship with God and mission over material gain, promoting a more holistic and grounded faith experience.

10. In reference to atonement, how is its extent described?

- A. Limited by specific groups of people
- B. Unlimited in its capability, but conditional in application
- C. Unconditional for all who seek it
- D. Applicable only during specific rituals

The description of atonement as "unlimited in its capability, but conditional in application" recognizes the theological understanding that Christ's sacrifice has the potential to cover the sins of all humanity, signifying its limitless nature. This reflects the belief in the sufficiency of Christ's atoning work on the cross, which provides the means for reconciliation between God and humankind. However, this atonement is not automatically applied to everyone; rather, it is contingent upon an individual's response to faith in Christ. This condition emphasizes the importance of personal acceptance and belief for the atonement to take effect in a person's life. Through this lens, the extent of atonement speaks to its universal potential while underscoring the necessity for personal faith, a core tenet within Christian theology and particularly emphasized in the doctrines of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. This duality encapsulates the essence of salvation, which is offered to all yet requires a personal decision and commitment to Christ.
