1. Which statement about natural lighting in bedrooms is true?

- A. Bedrooms must have at least one source of natural lighting
- B. Bedrooms may have no natural lighting
- C. Natural lighting is optional
- D. Natural lighting is required in basements only

Having a source of natural light in bedrooms is a common code expectation because it supports safe, habitable living spaces. The statement that bedrooms must have at least one source of natural lighting reflects this standard, ensuring daylight for visibility and contributing to safe egress in emergencies through an exterior opening. The other options conflict with typical codes: natural lighting isn't optional, rooms aren't allowed to have no natural light, and the requirement isn't limited to basements only.

2. If two children in the home have primary medical needs, how many children may the home have?

- A. Six
- B. Four
- C. Two
- D. Three

The main idea here is how licensing limits the number of children in a home when some have primary medical needs. When two children in the home require primary medical care, the rules cap the total number of children at that same count to ensure there's enough supervision, resources, and ability to meet those medical routines. Primary medical needs demand closer monitoring, medication administration, and attention to medical schedules, so adding more children could exceed what the home can safely and effectively handle. That's why the maximum allowed in this situation is two. The other numbers would go beyond what the licensing standards permit for homes caring for children with primary medical needs.

3. What is the maximum number of respite days a foster home may provide annually?

- A. 60 days
- B. 40 days
- C. 14 days
- D. 90 days

Respite care is a temporary break for the foster family, while the child remains under the agency's supervision. The system sets a yearly cap for this support, and that cap is defined per child in placement. The reason this is the best answer is that the limit is designed to provide meaningful relief to caregivers without disrupting the child's sense of stability and continuity with their foster family. For each child, the maximum amount of respite allowed in a year is about two months' worth of days. That means days used for one child don't pile onto days for another child in the same home, and the limit applies per child regardless of how many children are in the household. Respite is arranged through the licensing agency and can cover planned breaks or urgent needs. The other options are either shorter than the allowed maximum or exceed what the rule permits.

4. Before placing a child in respite care, which two steps must occur?

- A. Notify the child's parent and inform the child of the plan
- B. Notify the foster parent and inform the supervisor
- C. Obtain medical clearance and schedule a family visit
- D. Obtain consent from the school

The main idea here is that before a short-term change like respite care, you must involve those closest to the child and ensure the child understands what will happen. Notify the birth parent or legal guardian so they're aware of the plan and can provide any needed input or consent. At the same time, inform the child about the plan so they know what to expect, where they'll be, and why the change is happening. This combination protects the child's rights, supports family communication, and helps ease the transition. Other steps listed aren't the immediate prerequisites for moving into respite care. Internal or administrative actions like telling the foster parent and supervisor are important, but they don't address consent and child understanding. Medical clearance, scheduling a family visit, or school consent relate to other aspects (health, meeting logistics, or education) and aren't the two required steps for initiating respite placement.

5. May you place a child for babysitting, overnight care, or respite care in a home Licensing does not regulate, and if so, under what conditions?

- A. Yes, if the provider is not subject to regulation by Licensing and meets your agency's policy requirements
- B. Yes, regardless of policy
- C. No, never
- D. Yes, only if the child is under 6

Placements in a home that Licensing does not regulate are allowed only when the provider is not subject to Licensing oversight and the agency's own policy requirements are met. The agency has the responsibility to ensure safety and accountability through its policies, even for unregulated homes. If the provider is outside Licensing regulation, the agency can still approve the placement as long as it follows its policies—such as background checks, home safety evaluations, supervision plans, and the caregiver's qualifications as defined by the agency. This is why this option is best: it recognizes that unregulated settings can be used if the agency maintains control through its policies. The other ideas don't fit because they either ignore policy requirements, deny any possibility of unregulated-home placements, or rely on an age rule that isn't the determining factor in licensing terms.

6. Under respite guidelines, respite placements last more than how many hours to be considered respite?

- A. More than 72 hours
- B. More than 24 hours
- C. More than 48 hours
- D. More than 96 hours

Respite placements are defined by a duration threshold to ensure the placement truly serves as a caregiving break. The standard is more than 72 hours, which is just over three days. This longer period makes the placement a meaningful, planned relief rather than a brief swap in care. Shorter spans, such as a day or two, don't meet the respite definition under these guidelines and are treated under other service types. So, to be considered respite, the stay must extend beyond 72 hours.

7. What priority level is assigned to the supervisory contact when reactivating a home?

- A. Medium-High
- B. Low
- C. High
- D. Medium

When a home is being reactivated, supervisory contact is given a heightened level of oversight to verify that safety standards, licensing requirements, and corrective actions from prior issues have been fully addressed. This situation calls for careful, timely review and follow-up, but it isn't an active crisis requiring the absolute topmost urgency. That's why a Medium-High level of priority fits best: it ensures serious attention and prompt action to confirm the home is ready for placement, without treating the process as an emergency. Choosing a lower level would risk missing important compliance steps, while the highest level would imply an immediate danger requiring crisis response. A Medium level wouldn't provide enough emphasis on ensuring all corrective actions are complete before reactivating.

8. With an infant present, what is the maximum total number of children allowed in the home?

- A. Six
- B. Five
- C. Four
- D. Three

In home-based child placement licensing, there's a cap on how many children can be in the home at once to ensure proper supervision and safety. When an infant is present, that infant counts toward the total. The rule allows a maximum of five children in the home in this situation, so you could have four other children in addition to the infant, but not more than five overall.

9. How often must I have supervisory visits with the foster home?

- A. In the foster home at least quarterly; with both foster parents, if applicable, at least once every six months; with all household members at least once every year
- B. Monthly visits only
- C. Only annual visits
- D. No visits required

Regular supervisory visits are about maintaining ongoing oversight of the foster home to protect children and ensure compliance with licensing rules. The best approach sets a layered schedule that covers different aspects of oversight: visit the foster home at least quarterly to stay connected with daily routines and the overall environment; when there are two foster parents involved, check in at least once every six months to ensure both are actively engaged and aligned in caregiving; and include all household members in at least yearly visits to verify everyone in the home is aware of the foster care arrangement and any safety or policy updates. This structure keeps supervision steady and responsive without being excessively burdensome. It also ensures that changes in the household, such as new members or evolving dynamics, are noticed and addressed in a timely way. Choices that propose only monthly visits, only annual visits, or no visits would either add unnecessary frequency, miss important ongoing oversight, or ignore the required level of supervision altogether, and thus do not meet the standard practice for safeguarding the foster home.

10. What must be documented about two-year evaluations?

- A. You must document in the foster home's record that you have evaluated the foster home for compliance with all applicable minimum standards within the two-year time frame
- B. You must issue a new certificate
- C. You must file a report
- D. You must circulate to staff

The key idea here is accountability through an auditable record. Two-year evaluations are part of ongoing oversight to show that foster homes still meet the required minimum standards. The essential documentation is that the evaluation was completed and that the foster home was assessed for compliance within the two-year cycle, and this finding is placed in the foster home's record. This creates a traceable history that can be reviewed during audits, license renewals, or placements, ensuring there's proof the home was checked within the required timeframe. It isn't about issuing a new certificate every two years, nor about simply filing a separate report or circulating information to staff—the critical piece is recording in the foster home's file that the evaluation occurred and whether the home met the standards.
